SLEMP GOES SOUTH
TO BUILD DEFENSE
AGAINST JOHNSON*Southern Manager of Coolidge Campaign Will Meet Political
Friends.*TO MAKE FULL SURVEY*Florida Reports Will Be Secured
From Numerous Conferences During Days After Which Presidential Secretary Will Canvass Other Sections.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Bacon Slemp, secretary to President Coolidge, leaves Washington today for a political survey of the South. Slemp is southern manager of the Coolidge campaign. In the next two weeks he will by personal work erect defenses in the southern states against the invasion of Frank Johnson, manager for Hiram Johnson. He is trying to make in that section for convention delegates. During the holidays Slemp will come into contact with political friends with southern friends. He will go directly from Washington to Florida, which in recent years has become a notable political winter resort. Slemp will have no difficulty meeting many of his southern political intimates during his vacation. After the holidays he will see other friends in various parts of the South.

Hitchcock, Johnson's manager, has always been noted for his ability to line up southern delegates. The southern delegations which have voted earlier are important to any presidential campaign. In some circumstances the South might have the determining voice in the Cleveland convention in the selection of the Republican nominee, although that does not appear probable.

But Slemp on his trip will have an opportunity to learn what steps Hitchcock is taking, how far the Johnson organization has penetrated into the South and what effect has been produced with relation to the Coolidge candidacy by the restoration of full southern representation in the convention. He will also observe the effect of Henry Ford's announcement for Coolidge. In the South Ford would have been sure of support had he been a candidate because of his Miami Shovel offer.

Postponed to Feb. 1

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—Further postponement, from January 1 to February 1, of the assigned car order, which calls for a pro rata distribution of ownership of railroads, regardless of ownership, in times of car shortages, has been announced by the Interstate Commerce Commission, following the consideration of arguments favoring a postponement of the order.

Representatives of owners of private coal cars, including steel units and by-product coke plants, contended that unless they were permitted to send their own cars for the particular kind of coal required, such operations could not be carried on economically. Some coal, they pointed out, could not be used in their plants and that if in times of car shortage they were compelled to depend upon the ordinary market for their supplies, they would be forced to cease operations.

Wiley declared recently at a dinner given in the City club by the alumni of Georgetown University Medical school who are members of the Southern Medical association. Say Mountain Bluebird

Starved Girl Victims

Charlestown, W. Va.—Neighborhood tales of a mountain bluebird who enticed girls to his cabin and turned them out on the mountains to die when he tired of them, were reported by State Police Sergeant W. G. Brown investigating the finding of human bones in Boone county recently.

The man, who was said to have died some time ago, was not named. Neighbors said he had taken several girls mostly from Kentucky, to his cabin between Joe's creek and Slaughter creek, and later turned them out. About a year after they heard quarreling in the cabin, which led them to believe he had driven out a young Charlestown girl, neighbors said, bones of a woman and a child were found at the foot of a cliff near Joe's creek.

Charge Pupils Spoon

Openly During Class

Pittsburgh.—So many pupils in city high schools are secretly spooned romance, a course not in the regular curriculum, that high school authorities have thrown up their hands and called to the children's service bureau to provide a solution of the engaging problem. David J. Terry, secretary of the organization, told a group of United Presbyterian ministers "Spoonng," "mashing" and petting parties going on in all nooks and corners of the school buildings both during and between recitation hours have reached perfectly "scandalous proportions," Mr. Terry said. To make matters worse male graduates by the scores flock back to the schools during lunch hours to woo the sweet lawless. Too often these affairs wind up with long automobile joy rides, disastrous to afternoon attendance records, says Mr. Terry.

An Electric Iron For Christmas

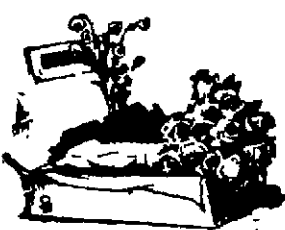

The SIMPLEX IRON has perfection in both form and finish; the nose is pointed and keen for tiny tucks which a wider iron would tear; the handle comfortably curved. Its mirror finish cannot rust, because the iron is heavily copper-plated before being nickelized.

Just attach this iron to any electric light socket, turn on the current and you are ready to iron at once. No more tedious stoves back and forth from a hot stove. The SIMPLEX heats quickly and retains its heat for a long time after turning off the current. It does perfect work always, whether on heavy flat goods or of linen and lingerie. And the work can be done anywhere—in the laundry, kitchen, nursery, or on the back porch in the summer. It has, of course, the Simplex Enclosed Coil Heating Element. Price

SATURDAY EVENING, DEC. 22, '23.

PRESENT DAY "OLD SCROOGES"

Those persons who would destroy childish faith in Santa Claus are receiving little sympathy and are being given no approval by the public at large. They may pride themselves that, like the so-called "modernists," participating in the prevailing religious controversies, they are much in advance of their benighted fellow creatures who would perpetuate "the childish delusion of Santa Claus."

The iconoclasts who would shatter the faith of children are unwilling or unable to understand that it is the spirit of the Christmas season, that leads a reality to the beautiful legend. They profess to be so intensely practical in their view of things that they would strip life of all its illusions, poetry and sentiment, leaving only the cold, hard facts of existence. As Christmas approaches each year these emotionless creatures obtrude their unnecessary views and cause unnecessary heartache where they ought to be glad of the opportunity to diffuse the true spirit of which Santa Claus is the personification.

"Like the immortality of the soul," says the Philadelphia Ledger, "the reality of Santa Claus is a never ending subject of discussion. Dr. Broome, superintendent of our public schools,
and some of his associates have issued statements rebuking teachers who would shake the faith of their youngest pupils in 'Saint Nick,' for the faith is bound up with the belief in the eternal Christmas legends."

"Those who believe in Santa Claus, like those who believe in fairies, are known for the spirit of good cheer
they spread; the faith in their happy eyes; their ruddy optimism, which no sorrow can destroy. Hope is theirs, and they have dreams, by which their days are radiant and bright. Many of the facts of the lives of these are not half so true to the little child
as school as the fiction of the reindeer on the roof and the answer to the petition in the well-filled stocking by the fireplace."

"Santa is just as real as the creed of childhood believes him to be, for his very life depends on the child's ardent yearning."

Having nothing to offer in compensation for robbing children of their belief in the beneficent spirit of Santa Claus, the destroyers of the age-old legend are without compensation for their loss of the respect and sympathy of both children and grown-ups. They are the present day "Old Scrooges."

The whole church world would rejoice almost as much as it did on November 11, 1918 if the "Sunset" controversy and the "modernists" would consent to making their "Armistice" a permanent cessation of their verbal warfare, which is as destructive of faith in religion as the armed conflict was destructive of human life.

The splendid musical programs at the churches, tomorrow ought to be all that is required to illumine your hearts in perfect harmony with the Christmas spirit.

We have only the word of the almanac to prove that today is the first day of winter.

The Business of Giving

A. V. Board in Forbes Magazine

"I know the elation that comes from making money and from building up commercial enterprises," says Albert A. Hyde of Wichita, Kansas, president of a company with large capital and doing business the world over, "but the joy that comes from giving one's time and money for making this old world better and happier is a thousand times more satisfying."

We hear much these days of the tithe and of the good that could be accomplished if all church members would give a tenth of their incomes to the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Mr. Hyde, however, does not stop with the tithe. In fact, he is said to reverse the order by giving away nine-tenths and living upon the one-tenth.
After deducting actual living expenses,
Mr. Hyde finds his greatest satisfaction and joy in giving away his whole income to religious, educational and altruistic work.

Mr. Hyde believes, with the late Andrew Carnegie, that "the man who leaves behind him millions of available wealth which was free for him to administer during his life dies defeated."

Solomon tells us that he that loveth
silver shall not be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth abundance, with increase.

Many men in their hearts realize

Ulster May Join Irish Free State

(Copyrighted, 1923, by United Press)
BELFAST, Dec. 22.—Northern Ireland, the irreconcilable location of Oranmore, constituting the "six-county" area of Ulster, is hostile to the "Southern" Irish Free State. But recent events have given Ulstermen
"furious to think."

The old motto: "Ulster will fight (against any suggestion of separation from Great Britain) and Ulster will be right," is losing strength these days.
Firstly, it would seem that Great Britain does not care whether Ulster fights or not—as long as Great Britain has not got to supply the troops to fight for Ulster—or against the rest of Ireland.

The Lloyd George-Michael Collins
Irish Treaty was bitterly opposed by many Englishmen—probably the majority of Englishmen, Welshmen and Scotsmen. If they could have been lined-up on a single issue—but once the thing had "gone into law," British "loyalists" enthusiasm for the cause of Ulster waned immediately. Ulster might continue to "fight" and the extreme British "Unionist" would say:
"Heard! Heard!" But once it became a question of deliberately opposing the law of the land, British generally were content to leave Ulster to look after herself. Ulstermen did not take many minutes to discover this.

A Good Business Man.
The Ulsterman may be a bigot from the purely religious point of view, but he is essentially a business man—as exemplified by the industrial prosperity of Ulster as compared with the rest of Ireland. Patriotism and religion enter largely into his composition, but he is a business man first, last and foremost.

The fact that the new Irish Free State government has been able to pacify "Southern Ireland" and that the present Cosgrave administration still holds on to its membership of the British empire, has not been lost on the hard-headed business men of the northern province. The successful floating of the Free State loan of $10,000,000—mostly subscribed by Southern Irish "loyalists"—has not been without effect on Ulster.

So far, Ulster has not made any appreciable contributions to the Free State loan, but Ulster's business interests are all for supporting a sound business proposition—which commercial experience shows the Free State loan to be.

The more point—politically—between Ulster and Southern Ireland continues to be the boundary problem. No agreement has been reached regarding boundaries, despite the efforts of the British government. (A Conservative government under Bonar Law and Stanley Baldwin) to induce Ulster
to meet the Free State representatives, rightly or wrongly, Ulster feels that it was "double-crossed" on the boundary question by the Lloyd George-Michael Collins agreement, and any suggestion of boundary rectification is regarded with the utmost suspicion.

Expect Ulster to Join.
However, Ulstermen are hard-headed, and patriotic or religious zeal does not outweigh entirely the claims of this truth. Accumulated wealth has been the downfall of individuals, of families, and of nations since history began.

Mr. Hyde studies his benevolence with great care. He thinks a man should seek and watch over his spiritual investments with the same care one gives to those of a material nature. Then, when satisfied that he has found those which are bringing big returns, he should put time, heart, and money into their betterment, that he may have the real joy of initiative and development. This happiness few know—that of its really being "more blessed to give than to receive."

Bridge Luncheon at Scotland.
Miss Virginia Ulsterman entertained
at her home in Arthur avenue, Scotland, yesterday afternoon at a bridge luncheon. Nine ladies were in play. The house was beautifully decorated in keeping with the Christmas season, and Christmas favors were given. Among the out of town guests were Miss Eleanor Solomon of Connellsville, Miss Helen Gray, Miss
Virginia Brown, Miss Millicent Sauls,
Mrs. Richard Foster and Mrs. S. W.
Brown of Uniontown, Miss Elizabeth
Stephens of Masontown, Miss Sara Hood and Miss Margaret Jones of Mount Pleasant, Miss Margaret Vanco of Greensburg, Miss Jean Ramsey of United, Miss Helen Strouse and Miss Florence Semler of Latrobe, Miss Thelma Blackmore, Miss Jean Stephens, Miss Sara Canfield, Miss Anne Suzman and Miss Esther Anawalt of Pittsburg. Prizes were won by Mrs.
John Gramer of Scotland and Miss Helen Gray of Uniontown.

pure business considerations, and the general impression is that Ulster will eventually "come in" to the Irish Free State.
The knowledge that Ulster can swade imperial taxation by entering, or coming to an arrangement with the Irish Free State is a big inducement to a commercial people. The Irish Free State loan is free from income tax—in the double sense, that holders of stock merely pay a single tax to one country or the other—and this consideration strikes the patriotic, but common-sense, Ulster business man.
Ulster will not long continue to "fight"—except verbally. Such is the view of competent observers.

Edgar A. Guest

A CHRISTMAS GREETING.

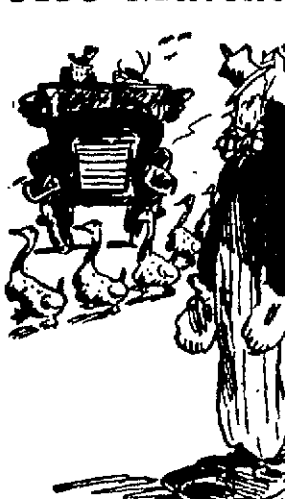

Take this old wish once more
From one who, day by day,
Finds welcome at your door,
And joy in all you say:
As you have dealt with me,
May time no deal with thee.

May every morning smile
On you in passing by,
And light the untrod mile
And make you glad as I Have always been to me,
Your hand held out to me.

Old friend, this little rhyme
Is penned to wish that you May find this Christmas time
Your silence the fairest hue;
May you and yours rejoice
As I, who hear your voice.

May time unto the end—
And distant that may be—
To you be such a friend
As you have been to me,
God grant that time may do
Its kindest for you.

Abe Martin

JAPAN ORDERS U. S. LUMBER

Tokyo Government Purchases 97,150, 000 Feet—More to Follow.

Contracts have been awarded in the United States for 97,150,000 feet of lumber by the Japanese government, for dwellings in the area devastated
by the earthquake. It was announced recently by the Japanese embassy at Washington.

The contracts have been made with the Douglas Fir Exploitation and Export company, representing 108 West coast mills, for 50,400,000 feet of Douglas fir and Pacific hemlock, and with Bradley Brothers Mill company of Ridgely, Wash., for 750,000 feet of red cedar. No figures were given out concerning the prices involved.

Ambassador Hanihara is awaiting additional advice of actual lumber requirements before calling for bids for more supplies.

The lumber will be distributed among many thousands of Japan's destitute and suffering, and the individuals
most in need will assume responsibility for rebuilding their homes. The construction of dwellings in the wrecked area will be of a temporary character.

HUNTER IN TIGHT PLACE

Attacked by Bear on Edge of Precipice
in Oregon.

The thrill that comes to a hunter
when he suddenly is placed literally between a charging bear and the edge of a precipice was described by J. J. Chisholm, grain buyer of Pendleton, Ore.,
on his return from a hunting trip with Fred Hoskins and two Wallawa county men in the Wallawa mountains on the banks of Snake river.

While picking his way along the rim
rock and going down into the valley of the Snake, Hoskins passed a natural cave. He was startled when a big brown she-bear came charging from the cave toward him. Without time to raise his rifle to his shoulder he fired one shot, which struck the animal in the head and caused instant death.

The bear was only four feet from Hoskins when he fired, according to Mr. Chisholm.

CENTIPEDES FROM TRINIDAD

London Zoo Is Given Two Specimens,
Each More Than One Foot Long.

A pair of unfriendly looking centi-pedes from Trinidad have been presented to the London zoo. They are each more than a foot long, and at the broadest part nearly half an inch across. They are dark brown, with rings on the long feelers and on the legs, a pair of which projects from each flattened segment of the body.
These tropical centipedes live in shady places, hidden under bark, stones or dead leaves, moving chiefly at night.
It has been shown that the whole of the body of these centipedes secretes
a venal venom, so that even the wounds made by the sharp claws are extremely painful. Under the surface of the head it carries a formidable pair of poison fangs, the venom of which escapes by a pore in the claw, being formed by large glands at the base of the claws. The venom is an acid opalescent liquid, hardly miscible with water. When injected into the veins of rabbits it produces instan-taneous paralysis, with coagulation of the blood; when injected under the skin enormous abscesses are rapidly formed. The bite is very painful to human beings, but has not been known to be fatal, although it causes inflammation, local swelling and occasionally ulcers.

Expensive.
Frederick O'Brien, author of South Sea island adventures, was entertaining friends at his Glendale home with some of his experiences. He chanced to remark that on one of the islands
a wife could be bought for the equivalent of $5. "How perfectly awful!"
exclaimed one of the ladies present.
"Oh, I don't know," reflected her husband, "I suppose prices are high there,
just the same as everywhere else."

The Sleeping Child.
One Mother Says:
I watch my children's sleeping positions. Habitual lying on one side tends to develop a wrong spinal curve. Lying on the back with a high pillow is likewise harmful. Both positions throw the shoulders forward.

HIGH SCHOOL IS EASY VICTOR OVER MOUNT PLEASANT

Visitors Score But Two Field Goals They Coming In Last Quarter.

FINAL SCORE IS 30-17

After losing two games out of three of the pre-holiday series, the High School five staged a brilliant comeback by defeating the fast and slippery Mount Pleasant aggregation last evening in the local gymnasium by a score of 30 to 17.

The game proved to be a very interesting one, fast and furious from the beginning to the end. George LaRue and Welsh wore the stars for the locals, and Post, the smallest but one of the fastest, for the visitors.

The visitors did not succeed in scoring until the last quarter, Post making both goals. In the beginning of the game Mount Pleasant was showing all it had trying to score. After the visitors saw they could not score they tried hard to prevent the locals from running up a big score.

Tonight the local boys will journey to Redstone to strut their stuff.

GULBRANSEN

The Registering Piano

Real Music—"As You Like It"

Do your own playing! It's so much more fun than to have others do it for you!

To go to your Gulbransen—and actually play—gives you a real sense of accomplishment! It interests—enthralls! It is one of the most delightful experiences imaginable!

Delightful because Gulbransen music is so expressive! So full of feeling—so full of life—you take a personal part in producing it.

Accented, for instance. That's important! For in any piece you play there's a strain of "melody" you must pick out and accent properly, to give it a pleasing rendition.

But, where are the melody notes? In what part of the keyboard do they occur? With the ordinary player-piano that's a real problem. But by observing the Melody Indicator—a simple and convenient little patented guide—you know where the melody notes are, and just where to accent them, on the Gulbransen!

The Melody Indicator greatly simplifies correct playing. In combination with sensitive "pedal-touch" and Gulbransen Instruction Rolls, it is the thing that makes musicianly playing possible!

TO CREATE TWO ROYAL DUKES

King George to Make Dukes for Sons.

ONLY THREE HOLD RANK NOW

King George of England will shortly create two more royal dukes in the person of his younger sons, Prince Henry and Prince George. It is stated by some of the court intimates who claim to have inside knowledge. In the case of Prince Henry the announcement may be expected soon.

This step has been urged upon his majesty for some time, as the royal dukes of England have been conspicuous for their smallness of numbers since the days of George III, whose simple family supplied seven holders of dukedoms. The numbers of this rank gradually dwindled until the latter part of Queen Victoria's reign they were confined to her three sons, and at the coronation of George V there were only two—the Prince of Wales as the Duke of Cornwall, and the Duke of Connaught.

Only Three Dukes Now
At the present time this number has only been supplemented by the creation of Prince Albert in 1890 as Duke of York, and the existing number is barely sufficient to officiate at the opening of sessions and the unveiling of monuments and to attend to the other duties which fall upon royal shoulders.

The current rumors have opened up speculation as to the titles which will be chosen from the list of those which have been connected generally with the royal family. The title Duke of Edinburgh is a concession to Scottish pride and probably will be chosen for Prince Henry. It was last borne by the second son of Queen Victoria and discarded when he assumed the German title of his father, the Duke of Saxony-Coburg-Gotha.

The title Duke of Kent, Duke of Sussex, Duke of Gloucester, Duke of Cambridge and Duke of Clarence, all of which are now in abeyance, are expected to furnish the necessary appellation for Prince George when his majesty decides to use a hitherto unused name for his youngest son.

GOMORRAH TO BE EXPLORED

American Expedition Plans to Study Cities of the Plain.

Exploration of the Cities of the Plain, namely Sodom and Gomorrah, will be undertaken by an expedition headed by the Rev. Dr. M. G. Kyle, president of the Xenia Theological seminary, St. Louis according to an announcement made at Philadelphia by Prof. James H. Montgomery, of the University of Pennsylvania, and president of the American Schools of Oriental Research.

With Doctor Kyle will be associated Dr. W. F. Albright, director of the American school in Jerusalem, and President Day, of the American university at Beirut.

The territory where the explorations will be conducted lies at the south end of the Dead sea, where Sodom is believed to have been located and where the Arabs still show the Pillar of Salt into which Lot's wife was converted, according to the Bible.

Saving of 104,000,000 Yen is Shown in Cabinet's Estimate.

The Japanese cabinet's estimate for the ordinary budget for the year 1924 is 1,270,000,000 yen, the equivalent of approximately $636,000,000 in American money. This estimate is a reduction of 104,000,000 yen under the current year's figures.

The cabinet has further decided to reduce the proposed expenses for the remainder of the current year by 10 per cent.

The HOOVER

It BEATS... as it Sweeps as it Cleans

—for Mother's Christmas

Or perhaps it's for Friend Wife! He doesn't want her to be a slave any longer to house-cleaning drudgery. And Christmas comes to give him an opportunity to show his consideration for her.

To her a HOOVER means no more old fashioned broom-sweeping, dust-raising fire-some drudgery. No more dust-laden air to get in her throat and endanger her health, besides, soiling expensive curtains, portiers, upholstery and walls.

And the HOOVER "beats as it sweeps as it cleans." Owners who have used their Hoovers regularly for 5, 10 and even 13 years point proudly to the new-like appearance of their old rugs.

POLA NEGRI

"THE SPANISH DANCER"

At the Theatres

The Paramount

"THE LONE WAGON"—With Matty Mattison in the title role, is on view today at this theatre.

"The Lone Wagon" is a story of 1866, at the close of the Civil War, when Colonel Hilton, of the Confederate Army returns to his old home in Tennessee only to find it in desolation and ruins, so taking his son and his daughter, and, in company with several other Southern families, they set out for the West in a wagon train.

Don Juan Cassandro, a native Californian, was hired to guide the train, and during the long, dreary journey it was only natural that the beautiful daughter of the Colonel should fall madly in love with the romantic and picturesque Don Juan.

Monday and Tuesday, Matt Allison and Robert Ellis will be seen in "The Woman Who Fooled Herself."

The Soisson

"THE MAN NEXT DOOR," showing today at this theatre, is a Vitaphone picture with Alice Calhoun and David Torrence appearing in interesting roles. The production is one of the most lively that has been seen here for many months. "The man next door" is pictured with fidelity, and the scenes showing the mansion in which Bonnie Bell found only loneliness are the most costly examples of studio architecture that have been screened. David Torrence gives a splendid impersonation of Colonel Wright. Frank Sheridan wins much laughter as Curly, and James Morrison plays the hired "man next door." Pretty Alice Calhoun, a favorite with screen fans in this city, plays Bonnie Bell, giving to her the sparkle of youth. Others in the cast are adequate.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Milton Sills will be seen in "The Spoilers."

The Orpheum

"THE SPANISH DANCER"—A Paramount picture, presenting Pola Negri, one of the foremost screen stars in the world, will be on view Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week at this theatre.

This is a romantic story of old Spain, masterfully produced by Herbert Brenon, based on the play and opera of "Don Cesar de Bazan." It is a picture one can never forget, because it has all the elements of attractiveness and appeal. It is a photoplay of transcendent merit and is no sure to please as any that has won popular favor within the last decade.

Antonio Moreno plays opposite Pola Negri in this attractive photoplay. The supporting company includes such sterling players as Kathlyn Williams, Wallace Berry, Gareth Hughes and Adolphe Menjou. "The Spanish Dancer" is an attraction of such high quality that we cannot recommend it too highly to you. It is superb in every respect and if you fail to see it, you will miss a treat that is distinctly worth while.

Leon Wilson story, is being shown today at this theatre as the feature attraction. The picture is one of the best shown at this theatre in months and is one that lovers of good motion pictures should see. The various characters are portrayed by an exceptionally strong cast, including Lillian Leighton as "Miss Pottingill," Edward Horton as "Ruggles," Lois Wilson as "Klondike Kate," and Ernest Torrence as "Colonel Egbert."

The State

William A. Brady's latest musical comedy, "Up She Goes," comes to the State Theatre, Uniontown, Christmas Day, matinee and night.

The play ran an entire season in New York at the Playhouse.

In this delightful musical play, there is a plenty of comedy, seasoned with pathos, a successful of strong drama with enough of clever dancing to give it plenty of kick—and the result is a production in entertainment which you cannot afford to miss.

The plot centers about a "love nest" in the making. The hero is building a bungalow for his bride-to-be. In accordance with the standard set by "Irene" she is a shop girl and naturally has a large family. Our hero has an uncle, the results of well-meant but unwelcome advice for the plot which more punch than Dempsey and Sikl put together.

And there are musical numbers which set you humming. "Journey's End," "Let's Kiss and Make Up" and "Up She Goes" have all become popular hits. "Up She Goes" have all become popular hits, chorus when you see the play—you'll be more than pleased.

SEEKS RICHES OF KLONDIKE MINER

Daughter of George W. Carmack by Tribal Marriage Fights for His Wealth.

St. Louis—When George Washington Carmack, trapper, prospector and adventurer, discovered the Klondike, Kate Mason, Tagish squaw, known as Mrs. Carmack, was the sharer of his joys and sorrows.

She went trapping with him, packing their belongings on her back. She sailed by his side as a burden bearer. She lived with him in cabin and tent and on the trail. It was pet luck with them. Sometimes they had enough to eat, sometimes not.

The child she bore him for a share of their hardships and privations. The day in 1898 when Carmack, prospecting up Rabbit creek and down Bonanza creek, found gold, the woman and child were waiting for him at the mouth of the Klondike.

When fortune made the pathfinder forgetful of the past he put away the Indian mother of his child and espoused a woman of his own race.

Carmack is dead and the English woman is dead. But the child of the white man and squaw is fighting today for the good name of her mother and for a daughter's share in the Klondike's estate.

The question which the courts of Washington state are called upon to answer is whether there was a ceremony which made Kate Mason, daughter of a former chief of the Tagish tribe, the wife of the white man. Proof of a ceremony is lacking.

Estate valued at $500,000.

There is no lack of proof that the Indian woman, with Carmack's full cognizance, was recognized as his wife, and that he acknowledged himself as the father of her child, but in after years he swore that she had never been anything but his "Klondike."

Besides the good name of her mother, Mrs. Graphe Carmack, the daughter, stands to win all of the estate, valued at one-half million dollars. If the courts decide that Carmack was married to the Indian woman, Mrs. Seftig will be the only heir. Failing to establish a ceremonial marriage, Mrs. Seftig may still win half of the estate.

Carmack, born in California, was twenty-five years old, when in 1896 he started to the Yukon over the Dyea trail. The following spring he established the Keely trading post at Dyea. It was there that he met Kate Mason. She was twenty and pretty. There was no young white woman in all that region to be the wife of the trading post man. So it was quite the natural thing, the meeting of George Carmack and Kate Mason.

Of the marriage ceremony, if there was one, there is no record, and no living witness has been found.

Discovered the Klondike.

In the fall of 1897 he went to Fort Selkirk. In the dead of winter, January 12, 1898, the child was born.

When Carmack, with Tagish Charley and Skookum Jim, brothers of the woman, as companions, went prospecting, he left the woman and child where they could have shelter and the meager comforts which native village or trading posts afforded.

Carmack spent the early part of the summer of 1898 salmon fishing at the mouth of the Klondike. In August he and Skookum Jim went prospecting up the north bank as far as Dominion river. On Bonanza creek, beside an old birch tree, on the edge of the rim rock, he found a sprinkling of gold washed there by the running water. And that was the discovery of what came to be known as "the Klondike."

They staked their claims, one for Carmack, one for Skookum Jim and one for Tagish Charley.

Meets the Other Woman.

The woman and child joined Carmack on Bonanza and the woman helped him as he staked his gold, and helped him carry it to the safe at Healy's trading post.

He "came out" in the fall of 1898 with between $200,000 and $300,000 of gold. He brought the woman and child along to Seattle and from Seattle went to Hollister, Cal., where the three lived with his sister, Mrs. Rose Curtis.

In the spring of 1899 Carmack returned to the Klondike, leaving the woman and child at the home of his sister. In June at Dawson City he met Mrs. Marguerite Lalme. She was a large woman, handsome, according to Yukon standards and was admired by the men who came from the diggings eager to lavish their gold for the refinements of civilization which Dawson City offered. She sold them claims and it is said that they were lavish in payment, spilling their dust on the counter and not bothering to brush it back into their pouches.

She mentions this detail of her business career at Dawson by way of offsetting the claim that her present affluence was derived altogether from Carmack.

The two came out together in 1900 and went to San Francisco. Carmack wrote to his sister from there that he had lost his affection for Kate and would not have anything more to do with her. Kate sued for divorce, but withdrew the action when she learned that Carmack and Marguerite Lalme had been married at Olympia in October for separate maintenance to have come of this litigation.

SITE OF ANCIENT CITY IN OREGON

Pioneer Resident of Ashland
Tells of Ruins

MANY VISIT FOSSIL LAKES

It was half a century ago that I first heard of the supposed ruins of a great city in a dead lake of Silver Lake valley, and during that time I have been learning year by year new facts. Writes C. B. Watson in the Portland Oregonian. It is in the neighborhood of the "old riverbed" the so-called "fossil lakes" and other natural curiosities found not many miles east of Crater lake, among which, to me, the "old riverbed" is one of the most suggestive natural wonders in that interesting region.

The "old riverbed" has been so called by the early explorers and men from the early days of invasion by them, and is so designated to this day. That it is an ancient riverbed of large dimensions is not doubted by any who have seen it. I crossed it in several places many years ago. It seems to have been as large as Snake river and has its course westerly through central Oregon, just south of Bear creek buttes, traversing what is known as the Oregon desert. Its course as it approaches the Cascade mountains is slightly toward the southwest and it continued in its course would reach the region now occupied by Rogue River valley.

Cliffs Suffer Erosion.
The rising of the Cascade mountains, however, cuts it off and obliterates it beyond that point, unless it may appear that the suggestions I shall make shall be admitted as probable conjecture; in which event the eastern border of Rogue River valley will be shown as the delta at its mouth. The facts upon which I found my suggestion are as follows:

We have the riverbed which has been explored for many miles and followed to the point where the rising of the Cascades has obliterated it. Now we will cross the great range to Rogue River valley and see what evidence we have of the delta. Standing on any of the higher points in the city of Ashland and looking to the north, northwest and northeast we will be scanning the southern slope of Grizzly mountain, which rises to a height of 4,000 feet and continues as a ridge toward the northwest, terminating with Rocky Ann near Medford; then the border of the valley bends to the northeast until Rogue river is reached. Along the sides of Grizzly are seen great sandstone cliffs resting on beds of conglomerate composed of water-worn boulders and pebbles. On the top of these boulder beds and underneath the incumbent sandstone in places, are tree trunks, petrified and lying end-on, showing the shingling of an ocean surf. The depth of sandstone above the boulder beds is perhaps 2,500 feet, which at the top is capped by basaltic lava extended along the summit of Grizzly ridge.

These cliffs and boulder beds have suffered great erosion and destruction by the elements for untold ages and the boulders and pebbles have been rolled into and scattered about adjacent portions of the valley. Examination of these pebbles and boulders discloses the fact that the rocks from which they came are not to be found in place anywhere in this region. They have been transported from some distant home. We know them to be stream-washed and not beach-washed. We know, too, that the stream which transported them was a large stream because many of the boulders are too large to be transported by a small one. These boulder beds and sandstone cliffs extend from a point northeast of Ashland in an irregular line, 25 or 30 miles to Rogue river. The sides of Grizzly ridge show three parallel bench lines. The middle one shows fresh water fossils, while the other two are unquestionably marine.

Island Held Cretaceous.
Doctor Condon, late professor of geology at the University of Oregon, in his little book entitled, "The Two Islands," has told of that time in the distant past when there was a great island in what is now southwestern Oregon and northwestern California, which he has called Siskiyou island, which I have also described in a little book published by me some years ago. Doctor Condon has described this island when all the country east from here was ocean to the Rocky mountains. Ashland stands on the beach line of this island which has been determined to belong to cretaceous times. The United States Geological department has endorsed this contention and has mapped this island as an old cretaceous island. In fact this conclusion has been adopted by the geologists' world. If the beach is cretaceous, which is proven by the fossils, then the island upon which the beach was formed was pre-cretaceous, which carries its existence back to a period millions of years ago. Captain Dutton of the United States Geological department is rated in the scientific world as one of the most efficient volcanists in the world. His conclusions of the various movements of the earth, the appearance and disappearance of islands and continents, are accepted as the best to date. His theory of "tectonic adjustment" is that when one part of the earth is depressed below the ocean some other body of land is elevated above it. We know that appearances show that all parts of the earth have from time to time been below.

Cataclysm Is Assured.
Now my contention is that in a very ancient time the western shore line of this continent—long before the Siskiyou island came above the ocean—was at or near the present eastern border line of Rogue River valley. That there was no Cascade range of mountains and that our old river had its course over a continent to the east of this shoreline and that the boulder beds and sandstone cliffs of Old Grizzly were deposited at the mouth of this great river.

There occurred a great cataclysm and a great part of the area lying between the mouth of this river and the present site of the Rocky mountains was depressed below the ocean and the "Siskiyou island" was elevated above it. Our old river was thus drowned and so remained for millions of years until an offshore deposit from the continent lying still further to the east had accumulated parallel to the coast and that action was initiated and resulted in the elevation of the Cascade range and the reclamation of this immense area, again to enjoy the sunlight after aeons of ages below the waves. Our old riverbed was only partly reclaimed, because while it slept in the darkness of the depths its course was largely obliterated and it was cut in two by the elevation of a stupendous range of mountains, which, however, left the mouth at which we now look and puzzle our brains to account for.

There are many evidences to support this contention which would require more space than I am sure could be given to me. One is that below these boulder beds lies a great depth of shale that is separated from the beds that were subsequently eroded from the old Siskiyou and lie on top of these boulder beds and other accumulations deposited by the old river. The shales now being developed by the Hartman syndicate near Ashland lie on the top of the great deposit that preceded the submergence and were lifted bodily with the upraising of the mountain. In this manner these later shales retain their great riches of organic matter from the Siskiyou island undisturbed by other sediments. Their situation and richness make these beds almost unique in the whole world of the world, resulting from near encroachment of this rising mountain in a way to intercept these deposits.

Many Visit Fossil Lakes.
Now we will give a little attention to the "fossil lakes" near Silver lake in eastern Oregon. These beds have been the nuclei of many scientific expeditions from eastern institutions in search of very ancient fossils. They are here in great numbers and are of many varieties now extinct. Among these fossils are evidences that at the time when the animals, whose bones are now found there, lived, man also inhabited the region and probably was contemporaneous with them. In the museum left by Doctor Condon at the University of Oregon will be found fossils from these beds, the age of which is still a puzzle. A very interesting question arises in this connection: Did these ancient animals live before the old riverbed was depressed below the surface? Then comes another query: Are the supposed ruins in Silver Lake valley the ruins of a city that perhaps stood on the banks of our old river? If so these ruins will antedate any heretofore found on the earth.

In the upper part of Sumner Lake valley is a river that comes bodily from the ground in the level plain, apparently coming from the direction of the old riverbed. I have been told, though cannot vouch for the truth of it, that in the old riverbed at the bottom of "pot holes" which contain water throughout the year, a plumb line shows a current moving toward the Cascades below the visible bed of the old river. Is it possible that Anna river, which I have just described as coming to the surface in a sage plain in Sumner Lake valley, only a few miles distant, is the outlet for the accumulations of the ancient river that was cut off by the Cascades? This new river has been appropriated for irrigation purposes and supplies a large volume of water.

At the gap between Sumner lake and Silver Lake valley there are many ancient hieroglyph markings of the rocks of the origin of which the natives know nothing. There are many other interesting natural curiosities in this wonderful lake region, together with objects that seem to have a human origin, that by study might enable prehistoric Oregon to be written.

NEW MICROBE IS FOUND

Doctors Believe That It May Be the Cause of Measles.

The discovery of a heretofore unknown microbe in the blood of measles patients is announced by Doctors Salimbeni and Kermoguen of Paris. It is one of the Spirochaeta species, is of corkscrew shape and always appears in the presence of another species of bacteria without which it seems to be unable to live.

The discoverers are continuing their research work, believing that the microbe may prove to be the cause of measles.

Armed Women Storm Jail.

Sixty women armed with pistols and knives recently stormed the jail at Alghero, Italy, and liberated three women and one man, incidentally wounding the mayor and clerk of the court. The four were imprisoned because they protested against the action of the mayor in cornering the town's water supply and selling it at exorbitant prices.

Visitors Wear Fez to Save Their Heads

New York.—Nathan Mandelblat of this city, who has been three years in Constantinople getting up an opera, returned recently on the French liner Rochambeau, saying that the fez had become the headpiece at night of every Occidental male living in Constantinople. He said a Western hat was swatted wherever seen after dark, and that sometimes the fez enthusiasts knocked the head from under the hat. Having regard for the symmetry of his own head, Mr. Mandelblat used a fez at night and brought it back in his trunk as a memento.

Mr. Mandelblat said the Turkish government was punishing by deportation to Asia Minor women who had associated with officers and soldiers of the allied armies during the occupation. The deportees are charged with violating Moslem laws.

VIOLA GWYN

By GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEN

"Forgotten?" he cried. "Good God—how could she have forgotten a thing?"

She moved a step nearer, her burning eyes fixed on his.

"You remember Rachel Carter well enough. Have you no recollection of the little girl you used to play with?"

"Of course I remember her," he cried. "I remember every thing. You took her away with you and—why did you not leave her behind as my father left me? Why could you not have been as fair to your child as he was to his?"

She was silent for a moment, pondering her answer. "I do not suppose it has ever occurred to you that I might have loved my child too deeply to abandon her," she said, a strange softness in her voice.

"My father loved me," he cried out, "and yet he left me behind."

"He loved you—yes—but he would not take you. He left you with some one who also loved you. Don't ever forget that, Kenneth Gwynne. I would not go without Minda. No more would your mother have gone without you. Stop! I did not mean to offend. So you do remember little Minda?"

"Yes, I remember her. But she is dead. Why do you mention her?"

"Minda is not dead," said she slowly.

"Not—why, she was drowned in the—"

"No, Minda is alive. You saw her last night—at Phineas Striker's house."

He started violently. "The girl I saw last night was—Minda?" he cried.

"I know—I know," she interrupted. "Striker told me she was."

"I know—she is not my half-sister?" he exclaimed, utterly dazed, but aware of the exquisite sensation of relief that was taking hold of him.

"She is no blood relation of yours."

"Does she know that she is not my father's daughter?"

"No. She believes herself to be his own flesh and blood—his own daughter," said she with the deliberateness of one weighing her words, that they might fall with full force upon her listener.

"Why are you telling me all this?" he demanded abruptly. "What is your object? If she does not know the truth, why should I? Good God, woman, you—do you not expect me to tell her, do you? Was that your purpose in getting me here? You want me to tell her that—"

"No!" she cried out sharply. "I do not want you or anyone else to do that. Listen to me. I shan't tell about the truth. I will not waste words. So far as Viola and the world are concerned, she is Robert Gwynne's daughter. That is clear to you, is it not? She is less than two years old when we came away—too young to remember anything. She is nearly twenty-two now, although she believes she is but thirteen. She does not remember any other father than Robert Gwynne. She has no recollection of her own father, nor does she remember you. She—"

"Last night she described her father to me," he interrupted. "Her supposed father, I mean. She made it quite plain that he did not love her as a father should love his own child."

"It was not that," she said. "He was afraid of her, mortally afraid of her. He lived in dread of the day when she would learn the truth and turn upon him. He always meant to tell her himself, and yet he could not find the courage. Toward the end he could not bear to have her near him. I do not believe he would have loved a child if one had come to him and me, no child of mine could take the place you had in his heart." She spoke with calm bitterness. "You say she told you about him last night. I am not surprised that she should have spoken of him as she did. It was not possible for her to love him as a father. Nature took good care of that. There was a barrier between them."

"I have told you the truth, because I am as certain as I am that I stand here now that you would have found it all out some day, some day soon, perhaps. In the first place your father did not abandon her in his will. That alone is enough to cause you to wonder. You understand I cannot exact any promise from you. I will do as you see fit in the matter. There is one thing that you must realize, however. Viola has not robbed you of anything—not even a father's love. She does not profit by his death. He did not leave her a fortune, but he left her a father. I am entitled to my share by law. I earned my share—I worked as hard as he did to build up a fortune. When I die my lands and my money will go to my daughter. You need not hope to have any part in them. I do not ask you to keep silent on my account. I only ask you to spare her. Now you know everything. There is nothing for you to unravel. You know who Viola is, you know why she was left out of your father's will. The point is this, when all is said—she must never know. She must always look upon you as her brother. She must never know the truth about me. I put her happiness, her pride, her faith, in your hands, Kenneth Gwynne."

He had listened with rigid attention, marvelling at the calm, dispassionate, unflinching manner in which she had shown her case and Viola—indeed, she had stated his own case to him.

"There is no other course open to me," he said, taking up his hat. He was very pale. "There is nothing more to say, now or hereafter. We have had, I trust, our last conversation. I hate you, I could wish you all the unhappiness that life can give, but I am not such a heart as to tell your daughter what kind of a woman you are. So there's the end. Good-day, Rachel Carter."

He turned away, his hand was on the door latch, before she spoke again.

"There is something more," she said, without moving from the spot where she had stood throughout the recital.

"It was my pleading, back in those other days, that finally persuaded Robert Gwynne to let me bring Minda up as his daughter. He was bitterly opposed to it at first. He was as firm as a rock on one point, however. He would bring her up as his daughter, but he would not give her his name. It was after he agreed to my plan that he changed the spelling of his own name. That was his real reason for changing his name."

"In the beginning, as I have told you, he believed it to be his duty to tell her the truth about herself. He was sincere in that. But he did not have the heart to tell her after years had passed. Now let me tell you what he did a few weeks before he passed away, and you will know what a strange man he was. He came home one day and said to me: 'I have put Viola's case in the hands of Providence. I have written it all out and I have hidden the paper in a place where she is not likely ever to find it—where I am sure she will never look. I will not even tell you where it is hidden, for I do not trust you—no, not even you. You would seek it out and destroy it. If she ever comes across the paper it will be a miracle, and miracles are not the work of man. So it will be God Himself who reveals the truth to her.' Now you can see, Keneth, that the secret is not entirely in our keeping. There is always the chance that she may stumble upon that paper."

"You are right," he said, deeply impressed. "There is always the chance that it will come to light. Are you sure that no one else knows that she is not his daughter?"

"I am sure of it," she replied with decision.

"And there is nothing more you have to tell me?"

"Nothing. You may go now."

As he walked rapidly away from the house in the direction of Main street he experienced a sudden sense of exaltation. Viola was not his sister! An sudden realization of the fact that she was not his daughter, and with it came a realization that Viola could never be anything to him except a sister.

CHAPTER VII

Brother and Sister.

As he turned into Main street he espied the figure of a woman coming toward him from the direction of the public square. His mind was so fully occupied with thoughts of a most disturbing character that he paid no attention to her, except to note that she was dressed in black and that, in holding her voluminous skirt well off the ground to avoid the mud puddles, she revealed the bottom of a white, be-ruffled petticoat.

His meditations were interrupted and his interest suddenly aroused when he observed that she had stopped stock-still in the path. After a moment, she turned and walked rapidly, with scant regard for the puddles, in the direction from which she had come.

Fifteen or twenty paces down the road she came to what was undoubtedly a path or "short cut" through the wood. Into this she turned hastily and was lost to view among the trees and hazel brush.

He had recognized her, or rather he had divined who she was. He quickened his pace, bent upon overtaking her. When, with the thrill of the hunter, he abruptly whirled and retraced his steps, checking in anticipation of her surprise when she found him waiting for her at the other end of the "short cut." He could hear her coming through the brush, although her figure was still obscured by the tangle of wildwood.

She emerged, breathless, into a little open spot, not twenty feet away, and stopped to listen, looking back through the trees and underbrush to see if she was being followed. Her skirts were drawn up almost to the knees and plucked closely about her gray-stockinged legs. He gallantly turned away and pretended to be studying the house across the road. Presently he felt his ears burning; he turned to meet the onslaught of her scornful, convicting eyes.

"Ah, there you are," he cried, lifting his hat. "I was wondering whether you would come out at this—"

"Can't you see I am trying to avoid you?" she demanded with extreme frigidity. "I wish you would go away. I don't want to see you—or talk to you."

"Then why did you leave word for me to come to your house to see you?" he challenged.

"I expect you know by this time," she replied, significantly.

He hesitated, regarding her with some uneasiness. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Well, you surely know that it was my mother who wanted to see you, and not I," she said, almost insolently. "Are you going to keep me standing here in the mud and slush all day?"

"No, indeed," he said. "Please come out."

"Not until you go away."

"Why don't you want to talk to me? What have I done?"

"You know very well what you have done," she cried, hotly. "In the first place, I don't like you. You have made it very unpleasant for my mother—she certainly has never done you any harm. In the second place, I resent your interference in my affairs. Wait! Do not interrupt me, please. Maybe you have not exactly interfered as yet, but you are determined to do so—for the honor of the family, I suppose." She spoke scathingly. "I defy you—and mother, too. I am not a child to be—"

"I must interrupt you," he exclaimed. "I haven't the slightest idea what you are talking about."

"Don't lie," she cried, stamping her foot. "Give me credit for a little intelligence. Don't you suppose I know what mother wanted to see you about? There! I can see the guilty look in your eyes. I am a naughty little girl and my big brother has been called in to put a stop to my foolishness. If you—"

"What are you laughing at, Mr. Gwynne?" she broke off to demand furiously.

"I am laughing at you," he replied, sweetly. "You are like a little girl in a tantrum—all over nothing at all. Little girls in tantrums are always whining, but not always naughty. Permit me to assure you that your mother and I have not discussed your interesting affair with Mr. Lapelle. We talked of business only."

"Then," she cried, "how do you happen to know anything about Mr. Lapelle and me? Ah! You're not as clever as you think you are. That slipped out, didn't it? Well, what is the verdict? What are you going to do to me? Lock me in my room, or tie me hand and foot, or—"

Please say where you are. It is not necessary to come any nearer Mr. Gwynne."

He continued his advance through the thicket, undisturbed by the malicious light in her eyes. She stood her ground.

"Viola," he said, affecting sternness, "as a matter of fact, I do not intend to thrust myself upon you or your mother. That is understood. I hope we have nothing in common and I distrust you. For your information, I will state that your mother did not refer to the affair at Striker's, nor did I. I know all about it, however. I know that you went out there to meet Lapelle. You planned to run away with him and get married. I may add that it is a matter in which I have not the slightest interest. If you want to marry him, all well and good. If you were to ask for my honest opinion, however, I should—"

"I am not asking for it," she cried, cuttingly.

"I should advise you to get married in a more or less regular sort of way in your mother's home."

"Thank you for the advice," she said, curtly. "I shall get married when and where I please—and to whom I please, Mr. Gwynne."

"In view of the fact that I am your brother, Viola, I would suggest that you call me Kenneth."

"I have no desire to claim you as a brother, or to recognize you as one," said she.

He smiled. "With all my heart I deplore the ill fate that makes you a sister of mine."

She was startled. "That—that doesn't sound very—pretty," she said, a trifle dashed.

"The God's truth, nevertheless. At any rate, so long as you have to be my sister, I rejoice in the fact that you are an extremely pretty one. It is a great relief. You might have turned out to be a scarecrow. I don't mind confessing that last night I said to myself, 'There is the most beautiful girl in all the world,' and I can't begin to tell you how shocked I was this morning when Striker informed me that you were my half-sister. He knocked a romantic dream into a cocked hat—and—"

But even so, sister or no sister, Viola, you still remain beyond compare the loveliest girl I have ever seen."

"There was something in his eyes that caused her own to waver—something that by no account could be described as brotherly. It was something she had seen in Harry Lapelle's eyes, and in the eyes of other ardent men. She was flustered and a little dazed, and she recovered herself, "Who told you about Harry Lapelle and me?" she demanded.

Fashion News Notes of Interest to All Women

Among fashionable boudoir accessories are a group of tiny French figures of painted wood. They hold handkerchief boxes, pincushions and make for, scent bottles.

A monogram, elaborate in design and vivid in tint, is the thought of the moment for many a blouse. These monogrammed blouses are by no means confined to those sports for wear.

Carriage of the jagged, irregular sort are affected by those women who do not discard ear ornaments altogether. The more bizarre and baroque, the more chic.

Tassels appear on hats, wraps and gowns in surprising profusion. The tassel is an expression of the Chinese trend, but these tassels are longer, longer and more ornate than any oriental housewife ever knew.

After wavering for a while, amber has decided to remain in the mode. Carved and malachite are, perhaps, a bit more chic, but amber in all its forms and colorings remains a favorite.

Costume blouses today are frequently copies of mandarin coats. This enables them to display the fashionable Chinese collar and decorations and peeling to the jacquette effect which remains so popular.

The brightly colored green and blue shoes which London bootmakers are trying to induce men to wear seem to have little effect on women. Some few women cling to gay shoes, but the brown and black and gray predominate.

The least effective accessory just now is the velvet scarf with which tradition and custom street frocks are provided. The scarf in some dark, rich, contrasting color, is fastened at one hip, with the other end left free to be thrown around the neck.

Girlish Lines Are in Late Fashion Picture

All girlish lines are lines of beauty if only they are allowed to be natural enough to show a plenty of their interesting contour. And that is an artistic fact which the designers have grasped most certainly for the season. The line of the figure is allowed to be interpreted. On the contrary, it is belittled to the utmost limits of its possibilities.

The slouch gown the princess gown, the one-piece frock without a belt are good accepted and honored in the styles that are being favored now. They are all primarily interested in the accompaniment of the natural figure rather than the adornment thereof. They are all keyed to carry out the natural gifts given by Providence and to help the figure's natural lines to do their utmost best.

We have learned to love the one-piece dress, no matter what its interpretation happens to be. We have learned to accept it naturally as our right of possession for each wardrobe in summer or winter. But now we are faced with an even simpler design in this manner than any to which we have been accustomed. Each line has been simplified, each angle perfected, each curve substantiated. And this season we can appear in frocks as simple as any that the Greeks ever conceived and the same time, as timely in harmony with the modern day and age.

There is only one primary demand for these new and simpler frocks of this season and that is that they shall be made of materials with weaves and colors beyond reproach. Once you allow yourself to slump over into the class of cheaper and less beautiful fabrics the whole point of the design of your gown is lost forever. It must have weight it must be handsome it must express something so far as color is concerned and then it can afford to get away with the simplest of lines and making.
